

Save the date!

IATP invites you to join us for a discussion with our international board and staff to share our analysis of the crises facing our food systems and how we can do better.

Join us! After the program, we will gather for a public happy hour and welcome to our new office in the East Side Neighborhood Services' building in Northeast Minneapolis.

High and volatile food prices, triggered by Russia's invasion of Ukraine, come on the heels of the pandemic, the threat of economic recession and a prolonged drought, symptomatic of climate-related disruptions occurring across the globe.

Our food systems need not be so fragile. In a world of abundant food, no one should go hungry, nor should our food systems contribute directly to climate disasters and biodiversity loss.

Communities, regions and countries are taking steps to make our food systems more resilient. At the heart of these actions, we need to strengthen our democracy. Join us to learn more about how crisis can become an opportunity to shift food systems onto more positive, resilient pathways.

Date:

Thursday, September 29, 2022

Time:

1:30-4:30 p.m. CT – Panel discussion
5-7 p.m. CT – Happy hour and open house*

Location:

1700 Second Street NE,
Minneapolis, Minnesota 55413

*Join us for one or both. Guests need not attend the panel discussion to attend the open house!

Formal invitation, as well as more information and registration details on the IATP website, to follow. Are you interested in attending? Let us know by clicking below!